

1. Spotlight: Inspirer of the month

Meet Abhay Sehgal: Contemporary Artist and Code Brown Founder Known for His Unique Interpretation of Indian Culture and Psychology

Abhay Sehgal is one of those artists who makes you see India in a different light. He doesn't just paint or make visuals; he creates worlds where tradition and modern life meet and talk to each other. He studied at the School of the Art Institute of Chicago and works out of Delhi, but what strikes me is how his work feels so grounded yet so imaginative. It's not about the past or nostalgia; it's about how India can feel alive and evolving in the moment through art.

Get Inspired

His art often takes familiar things, Indian motifs, architecture, and textures, and then twists them in ways that make you stop and think. There's surrealism, yes, but also a lot of feeling and storytelling. It's like each piece is asking you to notice yourself, your memories, and the world around you in a slightly different way.

What's really exciting is that he's also the mind behind Code Brown, a creative collective and brand that carries this same philosophy forward. It's playful, experimental, and bold. It's about celebrating India as it is right now: raw and layered, chaotic and poetic. His work through Code Brown makes you think about identity and culture differently. It feels unapologetic and alive.

Sehgal's work doesn't just stay on the wall or in a frame; it pulls you in psychologically and emotionally. He draws from Indian mysticism, psychology, and the stories we all carry in small ways, so it feels personal yet universal. His visuals invite reflection and curiosity. You can get lost in them, but also feel seen.

For anyone following contemporary Indian art, collectors, creatives, or just people curious about culture, his work opens up a conversation about how India can be represented today. Not stuck, not frozen, but fluid, thoughtful, and inventive. And it's exciting because it feels like a movement, something that's larger than one artist alone.

Inspirers:

2. Shounak Tewarie, the AI-savvy visual director turning myth and memory into modern art.

Get Inspired

Shounak Tewarie is a creative director and digital artist who translates South Asian myth, intimacy and contemporary feeling into luminous, AI-aided imagery. He runs the creative imprint Art Is Well (@artiswellnl) and posts as @byshounak — two active Instagram homes where his richly textured, devotional-meets-digital pieces live for a global audience.

instagram.com+1

What sets Tewarie apart is an editorial sensibility: his images are not flashy experiments in generative noise but composed visual narratives that borrow from ritual, costume and familial memory. Early profiles and portfolio features describe him as a “versatile creative entrepreneur” whose practice sits at the intersection of concept design, home & living product art and digital storytelling. Creative Gaga+1

A signature made of myth, colour and gentle resilience

Tewarie's feed often pairs hyper-detailed, jewel-toned portraits with short, candid lines that read like micro-mantras. In one recent post he layered a calm, glittering portrait with the line: "Dear God, keep the bare minimum away from me..." a small, personal provocation that became a widely shared image on his account. In another, an image carries the line: "I'm proud of myself. I went through every type of pain... but never gave up." a direct caption that shows how his work folds private testimony into public art. instagram.com+1

How he works, AI as craft, not gimmick

Tewarie is explicit about process: he uses Photoshop and AI tools as part of a layered practice, marrying traditional compositing with generative approaches to achieve a painterly finish. Feature pieces describe his output as "spiritual artistry" that blends digital technique with soulful themes — a stance that positions AI as amplifier rather than author. Creative Gaga

Brands that should call him (and why)

His visual language makes him a natural fit for brands that want cultural depth with modern polish:

- Luxury & Heritage Jewellery — his recent collaboration announcement with Chaulaz Heritage Jewellery ("Crafted from history. Designed for now.") shows how his aesthetic complements heirloom narratives. instagram.com
- Premium beauty & fashion houses seeking editorial, mythic campaigns (bridal couture, high-end prêt)
- Home & lifestyle brands that want artful, limited-edition product lines (prints, textiles, decor) — his background in concept & home products supports these tie-ins. Creative Gaga
- AI / creative tech platforms for thought leadership and tool collaborations — he speaks credibly about AI as a creative partner.

Who follows him — the audience (TG)

Tewarie's work resonates with urban millennials and Gen Zers who consume culture visually: art-collectors and design-minded buyers, diaspora audiences seeking desi aesthetics reframed, and brands targeting female-majority, style-curious consumers. His posts—part devotional, part diary—appeal to people who want both aesthetic pleasure and emotional honesty.

Why he's an Inspirer

Shounak Tewarie's practice is a useful model for creators navigating the new rules of visual culture: be fluent in tech, anchored in craft, and fearless about vulnerability. As he puts it through his posts small declarative sentences that act like guiding principles his art is a way to carry memory into now. For brands and cultural platforms looking to connect with modern Indian creativity, Tewarie offers both visual charisma and conceptual weight. instagram.com+1

Sources & further reading

- Shounak Tewarie — Instagram (@byshounak). instagram.com
- Art Is Well — Instagram (@artiswellnl). instagram.com
- Spiritual Artistry (CreativeGaga feature). Creative Gaga
- Chaulaz Heritage × ByShounak collaboration announcement (Instagram reel). instagram.com
- Selected IG posts with verified captions quoted above. instagram.com+1

3. Sneha Chakraborty the travel artist painting India's stories, one mural at a time.

Sneha Chakraborty is a muralist and travel artist who brings the soul of India's streets and towns to life through her Travel & Paint India Tour. Her work isn't just visual: it's a journey of cultural memory, mental health awareness, and community storytelling. The New Indian Express+2TravelTradeToday+2

Get Inspired

The art of travel, in colour and texture

For Sneha, travel is more than a destination it's a canvas. She sketches, paints and murals scenes in places that many pass by. She slows down to capture hidden corners: market stairways, the way sunlight filters through ancient architecture, and the rhythms of local life. Her art is a visual journal that feels deeply rooted in place.

Her creative process also draws from her early experiences moving around India. In an interview, she recalled how her childhood involved frequent relocations, which opened her to diverse landscapes and communities from Assam's hills to Kashmir's snows. The New Indian Express

Public murals, private stories

Perhaps her most distinctive work is her Travel & Paint India mural tour. In collaboration with the Mind & Matter Charitable Trust, she's painted large-scale walls that speak to mental well-being and social stories. The Indian Express⁺²The New Indian Express⁺²

One of her murals in Madikeri (Kodagu) is particularly meaningful. She described her excitement for this project, saying on Instagram, "I have been planning on traveling and painting on the streets for two years now ... my first stop had to be Madikeri!" The Kodagu Express This mural isn't just a design—it's her way of engaging the community in conversation.

Every wall tells a story

Sneha's tour isn't driven by commercial commissions alone. She makes art where she sees a purpose. In a feature in The New Indian Express, she shared that many of her murals celebrate "unsung heroes" women in small Indian towns, environmental activists, and local changemakers. The New Indian Express Her work on public walls is a deliberate effort to make art accessible and socially relevant.

She explained, "When you create a beautiful wall, people think twice before spitting on it or throwing garbage near it." The New Indian Express The murals become more than art they become instruments of pride, care, and community.

Why brands should take notice

Sneha's blend of travel, narrative, and public art makes her a unique collaborator for brands:

- Tourism Boards & Travel Platforms can commission her to visually document cultural trails. TravelTradeToday⁺¹
- Hospitality Brands & Boutique Hotels can partner with her to design murals, guest experiences, or limited-edition artwork.

- Mental Health & Social Impact Initiatives can lean into her ability to anchor artistic work in community well-being.
- Art & Lifestyle Brands (stationery, sketchbooks, travel journals) could benefit from her sketch-based storytelling.

Who follows her

Sneha's audience is deeply cultural and thoughtful urban creatives, travel lovers, millennial and Gen Z art consumers, and community-conscious individuals who care about mental health. She speaks to people who value meaningful travel, not just exotic snapshots.

Why she's an Inspirer

Sneha Chakraborty embodies the art of exploration not just of places, but of people and stories. Her murals and travel sketches convey empathy, curiosity, and social purpose. Through every brushstroke, she's showing a new generation that art can be a bridge: between communities, between mental health and hope, and between daily life and shared human experience.

Key Sources

- Sneha Chakraborty's Travel & Paint India Tour (Indian Express) — The New Indian Express
- Her first mural at Madikeri via Mind & Matter Trust — The Kodagu Express
- Profile on her Linktree (shows street art, wall murals, digital art) — Linktree
- Feature on her street-art collaboration and national story tour — TravelTradeToday

4. Srishti Gupta Roy: The Illustrator & Cultural Maximalist Who Makes Chaos Beautiful.

Get Inspired

Srishti Gupta Roy is an India-born artist whose work is instantly recognisable for its explosive colour palettes, playful maximalism and pop-cultural humour. Her visual language – an energetic mix of textures, wit and identity – has positioned her as one of India’s most distinctive creative voices in illustration today. In an interview with Adobe, she describes her art as “a kaleidoscope of humour, bright colours and bold patterns” shaped equally by Indian chaos and the pop influences she grew up with.

Source: Adobe Blog

A Maximalist Identity Born from Fashion, Culture & Pop Art

Born in Kolkata to a Bengali household, Srishti Gupta Roy carried her early love for art, music, and colour from the city’s lively streets into her creative career. In her own words, growing up in a family where “art and music are embedded into daily life” helped her develop a visual language that blends tradition with playful modernity. Blog.adobe

Before becoming a full-time illustrator, Srishti trained in fashion design at NIFT, New Delhi, graduating in 2014 with a collection that won her an award. She then spent several years working in India’s retail and e-commerce ecosystem, designing for brands like Ajio, Myntra and Peter England, building a strong foundation in womenswear, trend forecasting and print development.
Source: IFP Profile

Her shift to freelance began in 2019, and with it came the rise of her signature cultural voice. One of her early milestones was her “High Fashion Memes” series — a crossover between runway drama and relatable everyday humour. Platform Magazine noted how this series became a turning point in her creative visibility, merging fashion maximalism with digital youth culture.
Source: Platform Magazine

She describes her own visual aesthetic as “super maximal, with a side dish of maximal.” It’s a style defined by colour riots, intricate detailing and a playful balancing act between chaos and precision.
Source: Platform Magazine

A Palette Rooted in India, Memory & Joy

In her Adobe interview, Srishti explains that her art draws from the sensory overload of India the prints, the layered textiles, the rituals, the markets, and the “chaos that exists in every corner of the country.” Alongside this is her childhood love of Archies comics and pop art, which influences her bold character design and narrative-driven illustrations.
Source: Adobe Blog

Her illustrations often explore identity, memory, humour and existential moments — but always through a lens of optimism and colour. Publications like Frankie Magazine have noted how she blends emotional introspection with visual wit, creating art that feels like a conversation with the viewer.
Source: Frankie Magazine (referenced in interviews)

Collaborations That Amplify Her Maximalist Voice

Srishti's growing influence has led to collaborations with global and Indian brands that value her bold aesthetic and culturally rooted storytelling:

- Adobe — Featured artist; she discusses generative AI, storytelling and Indian maximalism.
Source: Adobe Blog
- Michael Kors – “MK My Way” — She created personalised illustrations on handbags, adding witty motifs in her signature bright style.
Source: Social Ketchup
- Flurys (Kolkata) — A nostalgia-rich collaboration where she reimagined the iconic tearoom through merchandise, packaging and edible art.
Sources:
Adgully
MediaBrief

Additionally, her client list includes Google, Levi's, Netflix, Adidas, Asian Paints, Vogue India, and other major creative brands.

Source: IFP Profile

Who Connects with Her — Target Audience & Brand Fit

Srishti's audience is a vibrant, culturally aware mix of:

- Millennials and Gen Z who appreciate bold colour, identity-driven storytelling and humour
- Fashion-forward audiences who love the intersection of design, culture and digital expression
- Pop-culture followers who engage with illustration, memes and relatable socio-cultural commentary

- Brands seeking fresh, maximal, contemporary Indian aesthetics for visual campaigns, merchandise and events

Her work resonates strongly with consumers who value authenticity, nostalgia, and colourful, expressive design.

Why Srishti Gupta Roy Is an Inspirer

Srishti is more than an illustrator she is a builder of visual language. Through colour, humour and cultural detail, she shows that maximalism is not noise; it is meaning, emotion and memory layered beautifully. Her journey from fashion to digital art, from e-commerce to international collaborations, reflects a new wave of Indian creators who blend identity with aesthetics in globally relevant ways.

In a design world that often glorifies minimalism, Srishti proves that “more” can be intentional, intelligent and deeply personal.